Although the battle had no clear winner, Carthage managed to expand its sphere of influence at the expense of the Greeks, and Etruria saw itself relegated to the northern Tyrrhenian Sea with full ownership of Corsica. Bernini's facade remains the principal entrance and the recognized image of the institution.

According to Lorenzo Bedeschi, the Jesuit had sometimes been judged too in Main article: Italian Fascism. This led to revision both of modernist views and of the anti-modernism of the Jesuits. Many leaders of the unification movement were at one time members of this organization.
