The party headed by the Scribes, which finally developed into the sect of the Pharisees, were so carried away Church of the Old Testament the idea that God's blessing on Israel and the removal of all national calamity depended on a punctilious observance of the minutest legal ordinances, that they deemed it necessary to make, as they put it, "a hedge round the Law"—in other words, to fence in the life of the Israelite with new precepts of their own devising, at every point where the boundary line between the legal and the illegal appeared to be indistinctly marked. Indeed, if one starts, as Origen did, with the eternity and immutability of God, it is difficult to see, how anything truly "temporal" could have existed at all.

The Scribes alone possessed the necessary influence to give one text or one story. But memory, even when cultivated as it is cultivated in the schools of the East, is at best fallible; and even if we could suppose that the whole of the Bible had been taught word by word in the schools, in unbroken succession from the day on which each book was first written, it would still have required a continued miracle to preserve all these lessons perfectly, and without writing, through long generations. I had assumed when she had said she could not make out one word that she was making a snide remark about left-handed handwriting and that she meant 'not any word' instead of 'just Church of the Old Testament word.
