Luck o' the Irish. Iowa Digital Newspaper Project. Last great counter-attack From this moment on, the German armies were more or less continuously in retreat on the eastern front. In effect, Stalin's policy was "the only good German is a dead German." Coalition governments were set up in which the Communists were in a minority. On D-Day the projected first day of the invasion two American airborne divisions were to land behind the western end of the assault area and one British at the eastern end, while amphibious armour was to swim ashore with the leading waves. However, the waiting has been so long and the Russians are suffering so terribly that they required mobile armour, not static defences.
