Some Mississauga and Chippewa oral history holders that I have spoken to claim that their ancestors came from the east - that they migrated from the Atlantic seaboard to central Ontario sometime before contact with Europeans. For the British officials who negotiated the first treaties with the southern Ojibwa, the concept of exclusive property in fishing places would not have been foreign.

Richardson granted postponement for one week. In the October by-election he The Upper Canadian records are replete with colonial concerns about the moral effects of fishing on a settler society. They explained why the landed gentry argued that its game laws were in the best interest of English society and how they girded their laws with ideological justifications.

Previous Next. One worked only as much as was required. But Scotland did not have the same markets, and had few towns, so only a few hundred Huguenots went that far north. Big Canoe explained: we put up a very large wigwam this is our station we meet here every Saturday stayed over Sunday this is the place where we dry our skins or furs - we leave our station every Monday to our various places where we The families reported that they trapped beaver, otter, mink, muskrat, fisher, and marten principally along the shores of their hunting limits.
